Human Nature

Masato Komura

Hello, everyone. Today, I would like to talk about my opinion about the world. I like this world. And I like my family and friends. I like them, but I wouldn't like them if they were the only ones in this world. I like them because I miraculously met them out of billions of people in this wide world. It is only because of this world that so many miracles can happen. So, I love this world and wish for eternal peace.

Then, what exactly is peace? Many people say that the opposite of peace is war. But is it really so? If there is no war, is there peace in this world. Is there really peace in a world that is full of racism and social violence? I still don't believe that this world is peaceful. In the beginning, I said, "I like them because they miraculously met me in this wide world." It is you, no one else, who makes me feel the miracle of meeting. So for me, people from all over the world, whom I have never met face to face, are the people I should be grateful to, the people who are important to me. I don't wait those people to do anything to hurt each other. I want them to take care of each other. Discrimination is caused by judging differences between groups more than differences in groups. However, I believe that racial differences are only on the outside, in terms of appearance and culture, but on the inside, in essence, we are all the same. A man named Frank Sinatra said, "If you don't know the guy on the other side of the world, love him anyway because he's just like you. He has the same dreams, the same hopes and fears. It's one world, pal. We're all neighbors." This is the essence of what I'm saying. As we move forward with our dreams, hopes and goals in our daily lives, we stumble, worry and move forward again. We may be different races, but we are all the same. So, let's stop discriminating. Instead of focusing on our differences. Let's look for the same things and coexist. Why are people so obsessed with their differences? I think it is because they are afraid. They are afraid of things that are right, and I think somewhere in their hearts they have that feeling. In such a case, we need to help each other, and when you are close to someone you can trust, your little fears will disappear. People are all the same, and differences don't make you wrong, let's say goodbye to our timid selves. The human heart is strong. The more friends you have, the stronger you become. The current state of the world is that we use this strength of the group for bad things such as discriminatory behavior. From now on, however, let's use the strength of the group for goodness. We can do it because there is no such thing as a person who doesn't have a shred of kindness in them.

Let's take care of the people around us first. Then, let's be grateful to strangers somewhere in the distance. We are the ones who make this world go round. Let's create a world without discrimination and take another step toward a peaceful world.

Peace is the way

Peng Suan Qiu (Madeline)

Peace is a dream within our reach but always seems so far away. If we learn from history, we will see that even though fear is the fastest way to control, it isn't the only solution. That is because hatred made us revenge on each other, and it only creates a vicious circle. I believe we can start a new chapter of our lives by working together. If we do so, we will be one step closer to the goal we are aiming for.

My idea of peace is to share joys and sorrows, and help support each other, because everyone is working toward the same goal, staying alive, since our world still has a lot of problems waiting for us to solve. I think war is how strong countries force vulnerable countries to give in, but what if they simply talk or try to negotiate? Could there have been a different result? This tells us that peace can be achieved if you truly want to, our past is here to tell us the mistakes we used to make, and if we look for them, there is always a clue hidden within.

Would you hate someone you never met and know anything about? I think most people would answer no because you have no reason to hate them. Everyone has a family to protect, so what if your lives were threatened and by hating innocent people you would be saved. Would you hate them? One of my favorite books is "The diary of a young girl" it tells the story of Anne Frank; I don't think it was fair that the Jews were discriminated against and massacred just because they were Jews. That wasn't either reasonable or moral. If I were Anne, I would forgive the person who told the secret police because he just wanted to protect his loved ones. The real criminal is the person behind everything as they were the ones who made everyday citizens go opposite to each other. I remember that Confucius once said always treat others as you want them to treat you. This sentence means to have empathy for people who are having a hard time. We should try to put ourselves into someone else's shoes, for this is another step towards peace.

An important part of peace is having respect for others and learning to have tolerance. If we respect their culture and beliefs, we will find similarities between each other. Maybe there is something we can learn from our differences, such as we can share things they don't know. Many people around the world are lending a helping hand to make this world a better place, and our world can be more peaceful by doing this. We can join them, and together we can change this world with our own hands. A little help can make a big difference. Let's start now! It isn't too late. There is no way to peace because peace is the path we are walking, and it's not an impossible dream.

Example in 2023

✂From this year, 1st prize student and parent or teacher are invited to Kanoya City, but because of bad weather we didn't accept them. We are waiting for 2024 new challenge.

Why I believe Peace is the only way to a better future!

Chung Dau Elementary School Fourth grade,
Sean Chen

Time goes back to May 31, 1945, in Taipei. There was a young man named Haru who had just collected duck eggs from the banks of the Keelung River at Duck Village. He intended to sell them at the market in exchange for daily necessities. While walking halfway, the air raid alarm suddenly sounded, startling him. With the duck eggs in his hands, he panicked and began to run. As the sound of explosions grew nearer, suddenly there was a loud bang beside him, causing him to lose his balance for a moment. The duck eggs he was carrying rolled and broke, leaving a mess on the ground. Despite feeling disheartened, he didn't have time to clean up and continued running towards the nearest shelter.

After the air raid finally ended, he made his way to the market with heavy steps. He only had some loose change in his pocket, barely enough to buy some rice to bring home. At that moment, a friend at the market noticed him and immediately reached out to take off her own hat, exclaiming, "Haru, why are you wearing a torn hat?!" Haru glanced at the hat his friend held, only to see a palm-sized tear on the crown. He was both astonished and frightened. Images flashed in his mind, of fragments from the explosion swiftly passing just above his head. The fragments were so fast and sharp that they tore through the hat, yet it still remained securely on his head. Overwhelmed with the realization of his narrow escape, he couldn't help but burst into tears.

This young man named Haru is actually my great-grandfather. When my grandmother told me this story, I couldn't help but think that if that shell had deviated a few centimeters, I wouldn't have had the opportunity to come into this world and share this story with everyone. War is cruel in this way. Death can strike anyone at any moment. When a life is extinguished, all the subsequent lives and the possibilities of a better future vanish as well.

World peace is not just an inspiring vision for humanity. It represents the replacement of conflict and violence with cooperation and understanding. On the contrary, war is the most violent means, and even when it ends, it may create more problems and leave more tragic memories in the hearts of people, requiring more time to heal.

Each one of us can contribute to promoting world peace. Open communication and sincere understanding of each other can bridge the gaps between different cultures, ideologies, and interests, fostering peaceful coexistence and ensuring the opportunity for the sustainable development of our planet for future generations. Let us remember the sacrifices of those who lived through wars, and strive for a world where peace prevails, ensuring a future where stories of my great-grandfather, Haru, can be shared in a world of harmony.
